

Commercial Surveyors in Bristol Life

It's great to see our Commercial Partner and lead commercial surveyor, Matthew Baker MRICS, in the professional services section of the latest Bristol Life magazine.

As Matthew told the magazine, Allcotts has gone from strength-to-strength in Bristol, with Mark Gazzard MRICS the most recent member to join the team. Mark is a Chartered Building Surveyor with extensive experience in commercial, industrial, educational and retail properties within the South-West. Matthew, Mark and the other surveyors have a fantastic capacity for supporting our Bristol clients with everything from contract administration to condition surveys and dilapidations, and a team big enough to offer expertise in almost every sector and building type. Our structural engineers provide additional capabilities for those needing designs and calculations works, whether the project is large or small.

Bristol stands out as a terrific place to work in the building industry. Its remarkable breadth of building stock, both modern and heritage, is unique. Allcott Commercial's surveyors and engineers are looking forward to growing our presence in this vibrant city and the surrounding region for many years to come.

What sets you apart from other businesses in your sector?

Our independent status allows us to stand out from the plethora of corporate commercial surveying firms. Without shareholder restrictions, we can offer a truly bespoke service, spending time getting to know our clients' aims and goals, so we can make sure that what we deliver goes above and beyond expectations. In addition, our surveyors and structural engineers are all chartered with extensive experience, so our clients benefit from in-depth technical insight on every job, big or small.

What do you find most rewarding about your role?

Although I spend time managing the firm, I am still out on site most days. As someone who has chosen a practical profession, I find it really rewarding to get out there and deliver a great service, whether that is by anticipating and preventing problems on a building project or by providing expert advice on a property survey. A lot of our growth has been through word of mouth, and we have clients who come back to us time and time again, so I think we're doing something right!

What is your favourite thing about Bristol?

I am always struck by the diversity and entrepreneurialism in Bristol, fuelled by its dynamic universities and ever-present arts scene. The energy and vibrancy within the city is reflected in vastly contrasting building stock, which makes for a seemingly endless, and often unique, variety of challenges for a commercial surveyor; every day in Bristol is different. The thing I love most about Bristol is that every time you turn a corner you see something different, whether it's a cultural event, historic building, or ancient maritime heritage.

Are you looking to expand your offerings in 2023?

Yes! We have a great team here in Bristol, and we are continuously expanding. Recent recruits have built on our structural engineering capabilities and brought in contract administration experience of multi-million-pound construction and refurbishment projects. We will be growing in these areas, along with building on our existing network of landlords and tenants who use our services for condition surveys, PPMs and dilapidations.
