

Electronic Manufacturing - What is it?

When we talk about electronic manufacturing, this related to the process of designing, manufacturing, testing and producing electronic items that require electronic components and assemblies. In addition to this, it also covers the debugging and repair of electronic items that have produced using electronic manufacturing.

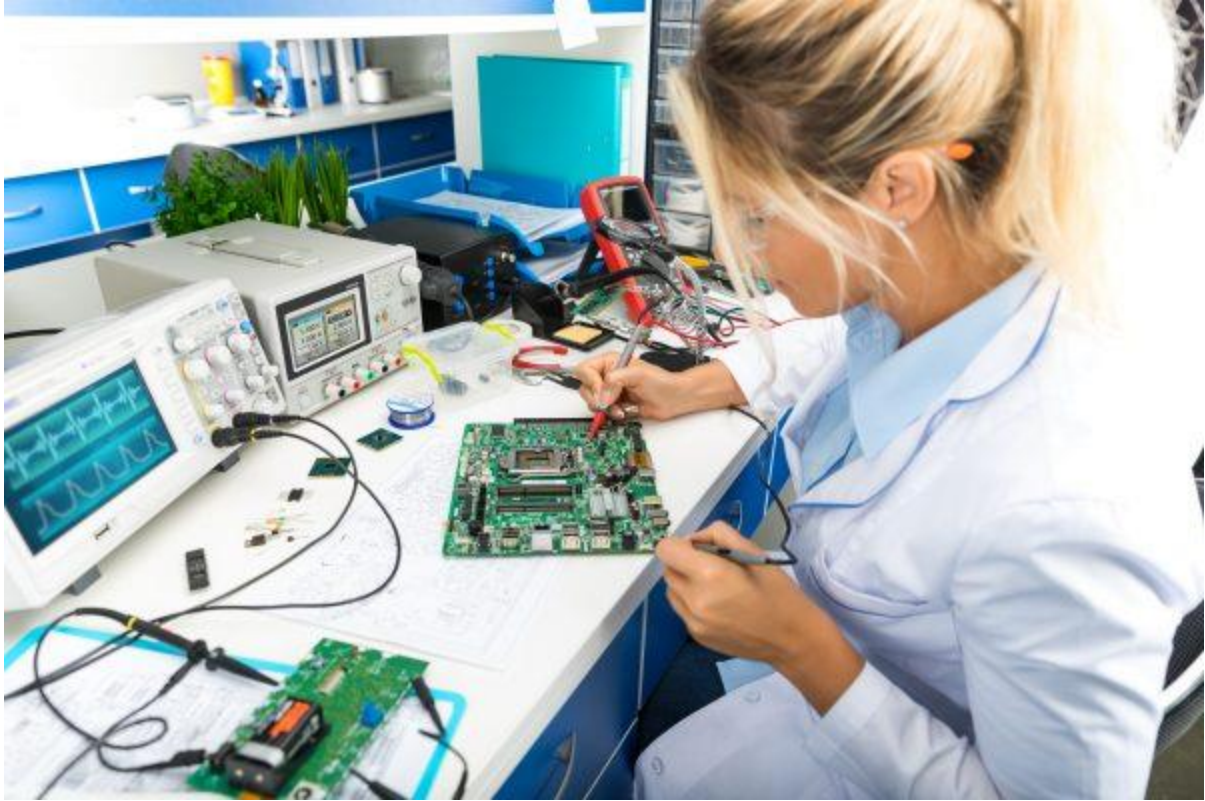

Many large companies choose to outsource electronic manufacturing to other countries, however, many smaller businesses and enterprises choose to use UK based manufacturing. As a UK based electronic manufacturer, we have a greater understanding and knowledge of the requirements needed to ensure compliance.

When Is Electronic Manufacturing Used?

Electronic manufacturing is used across a number of industries and sectors, from medical to product design and much more. There are a number of different types of electronic manufacturing such as; printed circuit boards, Microelectronics, Wireless and Prototyping; to name a few. Some of the things that use electronic manufacturing are:

- New Product Development
- Remotes
- Cabling Services
- Medical Facilities
- Computers

At Saturn Solutions, we provide a wide range of electronic manufacturing services to our customers. We have worked with all types of industries and businesses over the years and can undertake any type of electronic manufacturing project.

Can You Outsource Your Electronic Manufacturing

Yes! Most companies don't carry out electronic manufacturing and they'll usually outsource it to a company like ourselves. We already have the infrastructure in place to design, test and build in an electronic manufacturing environment. One of the reasons people choose to outsource is it's usually cheaper than doing it themselves.

By outsourcing your electronic manufacturing to someone like ourselves you can almost half the development time, meaning you could get your product to market quicker than a competitor who might be launching something similar.
